

Funding in government schools - Program for Students with Disabilities

A range of supports is available to meet the needs of students with disability.

Schools are required to put in place reasonable adjustments to ensure all students with disability can participate in all learning activities.

For some students with disability, extra funding for schools is available.

Program for Students with Disabilities (PSD) and Disability Inclusion

The Victorian Government has announced a new way of funding students with disability called Disability Inclusion. Over the next few years it will replace the Program for Students for Disabilities (PSD).

If your child's school area has not moved across to Disability Inclusion, your child maybe eligible for support through the Program for Students with Disabilities (PSD). This fact sheet has information about how to apply and how the funding can be used.

If your child already receives PSD funding they will continue to receive this until their school transitions to Disability Inclusion. Once their school transitions to Disability Inclusion the school will contact you to start the process.

Program for Students with Disabilities (PSD)

The Program for Students with Disabilities (PSD) gives government schools extra funding to help support students with disability and complex medical needs.
